Peer Review — the writer's page

Your readers comment in your Google Doc. This page is for you, the writer: what was said out loud. It becomes your cover page. While they talk, listen and write. No defending, just "can you say more?"

Name: Readers:

My ONE thing

Write it before your group meets. A place or a move you can point to, not "is it good?"

What they said about my ONE thing

1 · The opening

Which one pulled them in: A, B, or the original? Where did they start paying attention?

2 · The thread

Did they feel one thread through all six scenes? Did it reach the present and the future?

3 · Where they got lost

A gap between scenes, a jump, a place they stopped caring.

4 · The close

New meaning, or does it just stop?

What's working

The line or scene they remembered. Keep it.

The move or two I'll try before Tuesday night
